Instructions

You will need: one set of cards per group

- Divide students into groups of three or four, and give one set of cards to each group, and ask them to put it face-down in the middle.
- Students take it in turns to take a card and read the sentence on it without saying or showing it to anyone else. They think of a way to describe a situation in order to get other students in the group to say the sentence on the card.
- Students take turns to describe their situations, without reading what is on their card. The first student to say what the sentence on the card is (or a reasonably close version of it) wins.
- The student with the most cards at the end wins.
