Instructions

You will need: one copy of the worksheet per student

- Give a copy of the worksheet to each student, and elicit possible ways to finish the first sentence as an example. For example:
This year, I've been trying to learn a musical instrument, save money, work harder ..., etc.
- Give students plenty of time to complete the other sentences so they are true for them. Monitor and help with ideas and vocabulary where necessary, writing any new words/phrases on the board.
- When they are ready, explain that students need to find people with the same facts in common, by moving around the class and telling other students their sentences. However, when a student hears someone else's sentence, they must reply Me too! even if it isn't true for them. The student who reads out the sentence then asks follow-up questions to decide if they are telling the truth or not. If they believe that person is telling the truth, they can stop asking questions, and write the person's name in the second column. If they believe the other student is lying, they can move on to another student. Monitor and help with ideas for follow-up questions where necessary.
- When they have finished, nominate a few students to read out their answers and find out if the other students were telling the truth or not.
